What do you find more challenging in your day to day job?

It is a multitasking job and my role specifically implies working with several different departments at once, making sure they are all coordinated and “tuned”, as an orchestra. Communication in order to achieve that is essential and it poses its own challenges, especially when you are dealing with over 150 members of staff on daily basis. I don't find it particularly challenging but it certainly requires focus and time.

What advice would you give someone who is starting his career?

Think about it extremely well. Take your time to decide whether or not this is the career for you as it is a demanding one in terms of personal life. That being said, it is an industry that feeds on passion and rewards it, this cannot be done as “just a job”; my main advice would be go for it 100% if you feel the passion for it, for me it is absolutely worthy.
